

CONTENT MODERATION: THE LABOR BEHIND YOUR SCROLLING

Is it really that bad to repost
this?

Yes—and it does more harm than you think.

How to Keep a Site Safe

Users need protection from unsafe content, but AI is unable to effectively detect all violations, especially in photos/videos.

The Human Labor

- Those hired for content review are subjected to the worst of the internet.
- 40,000 employed by TikTok; 15,000 by Meta. Other companies include OpenAI and Google.
- Can be paid $10 a day working for multibillion dollar corporations.

An Emotional Impact

Under strict expectations, high quotas, and constantly changing rules, moderators have almost no support for the trauma and PTSD they develop from working.

Work that Goes Unseen

AI is shown as simple and clean; content is flagged, or it isn't. In reality, real people suffer doing necessary work for major tech companies that profit without responsibility.

What Can They Do?

- Workers, like Cognizant's contractors, sign NDAs that stop them from speaking up safely.
- Many jobs are outsourced to the Global South, such as the Philippines, Columbia, and Ghana. Employees there are less protected and struggle forming unions.

What Can YOU Do?

- Speak out and be a voice for change!
- Spread awareness of this unseen labor, especially because the moderators themselves are censored.
- Recognize the impacts your choices have on others, especially those providing seemingly invisible labor.
